Lieutenant General Vernon A. Walters, USA
Deputy Director, Central Intelligence Agency
CIA Headquarters Building
Langley, Virginia

Dear Dick,

I received today a copy of the tape of your presentation to the International Affairs Institute and am having it forwarded to you through the CIA liaison office. I have retained another copy which, when the opportunities arise, I would like to play for some of our people who were unable to get into the auditorium, particularly our young interns.

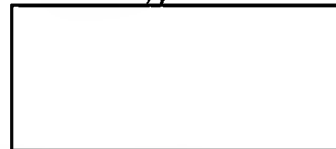

The compliments on your address continue to flow in. It was a spectacular opening day and whatever additional success the IAI lecture series may enjoy during the remainder of the 1974-75 program will be largely attributable to you. We are deeply indebted to you.

I look forward to seeing you again soon, personally as well as professionally. I've thought about your private remarks about [redacted] as you were leaving the building and, as a result, will insure that we exercise a more cautious approach in considering it as a fall-back area. This is the kind of 'human' information that we need to do realistic planning.

Thanks again,

Faithfully,

Assistant Deputy Director for

Dear Dick,

1. A few weeks ago we spoke about the possibility of your addressing the International Affairs Institute here at the National Security Agency. You appeared to be interested and I think we agreed that the only matter to be decided was a date. I would suggest the following: ~~29 or 30 August or 3, 4, or 6 September at ten in the morning.~~ 16-20 SEP.

2. I would also suggest that you be prepared to speak for approximately 50 minutes and then allow another 10 minutes or so for questions. The other officers and I would then be delighted if you could remain for lunch.

3. The International Affairs Institute includes NSA employees of every level who are interested in increasing their knowledge in the field of international relations. Previous speakers have included such people as Bill Bundy and Walt Rostow, Ambassadors Akins and Hart, and Professors Dobriansky of George Washington and Quigley of Georgetown.

4. As I mentioned to you earlier the subject would be one of your choice. I would suspect that our members would be interested in hearing your views on recent developments in Latin America. I am aware of your personal relationships with a number of South American leaders including President Peron and have no doubt that your personal views would be of very special interest to us. On the other hand, you may feel that some other topics such as the changes of leadership in France would be even more timely. In any case, I leave it to your judgement.

5. I look forward to hearing from you soon. Your office can contact either me at 688-7047, or the IAI secretary, Mr. Gengler on 688-6501.

Warm regards
